PREFACE.

The Trustees of the University of Pennsylvania have long had in contemplation to cause a Catalogue of their Library to be made, with a view of increasing it, and rendering it worthy of the first literary institution of this commonwealth; but they were discouraged not only by the small number of volumes that it contains, but by the little attention that was paid to it for a considerable time, in consequence of the successive changes which the University experienced in its organization, which occasioned the loss of many books, so that the sets of valuable works have been broken, which it will be necessary to replace entirely. The institution, however, having made important changes in their internal arrangements, and having determined to erect new buildings, in place of the former inconvenient edifice, which buildings, it is expected, will be finished at the close of the present year, it has been thought expedient to prepare and publish the present Catalogue of the few books at present possessed by the University, among which, however, it will be found, that there are a number of valuable works, and the whole, taken together, may be considered as a good nucleus for an academical library.

This library was begun by private donations of the friends of the institution, among whom the Rev. William Smith, the first Provost of the College and Academy, and Dr. M'Dowell, one of his successors, deserve to be particularly noticed. During the revolutionary war, our little collection was enriched by a donation in books from his majesty Louis the Sixteenth. Those books, printed at the royal printing office, consist chiefly of mathematical works, of works on natural history, among which is a collection of M. Buffon's, and some of the Byzantine historians. They have been all carefully preserved, and will, it is hoped, long remain, a memorial of the liberality of that great and unfortunate monarch. For a few years past, the Board of Trustees have annually appropriated a sum of money for the purchase of books, by means of which this library is now gradually increasing, and it is to be hoped, will continue to increase. But the funds of the University being limited, it is greatly to be wished that the friends of public instruction may contribute their aid to the attainment of this important object. Donations of books, therefore, will be thankfully received, and the generous donors will entitle themselves to the gratitude of future generations.
